

BOQUERIA TAPAS

Regional Restaurant of the Year for London

It may be the Regional Restaurant of the Year for London, but Boqueria Tapas is more Barcelona than Brixton. Taking its name from the Catalan capital's renowned food market, the charming staff serve up fresh, authentic tapas in a sleek dining room.

The GFG says:

'Judging by the energy, confidence and good vibrations coming from Boqueria Tapas, there's magic being worked by that mix of sparkling fresh classic tapas with quirkier, more contemporary ideas. And what impressed the Good Food Guide team is that it's all genuinely user-friendly – and fun – a real worthy winner of our Readers' Restaurant of the Year award for London.'

The winners' reaction:

Owners Jaime Armenter and John Scott said of their win: 'We are absolutely thrilled and immensely proud to win the Readers' Restaurant of the Year 2014 for London. After opening 15 months ago, the key focus of Boqueria has been customer loyalty as well as good service, quality and attention to detail from the entire team. It is just brilliant to have this recognised by The Good Food Guide and we are so grateful to all our customers.'
